

Search Tips

1. Begin by selecting a campus or campuses and entering the name of an academic program, such as accounting. Think about other possible titles for that program, such as finance. Also, think of different variations of the same word, such as nurse or nursing. (Don't forget to check the spelling.)
2. When you've found campuses that offer a particular program, add another layer to the search. For example, you might search for baseball in the list of options under Varsity Athletics. When a campus name is displayed as a match, you'll need to select "click to see list" under the category name. Your selection will be highlighted in blue.
3. When you've discovered which campuses offer both accounting and baseball, you may want to add a third layer by searching for a club or organization, such as student government. This is another category where you will want to think about other ways to describe your interests. In this example, you also could search for student senate.
4. Be sure to clear out previous selections before you begin a new search.
